As a consumer, I am seeking information on whether the FCC has or is dealing with, has made or is currently making, any regulatory rules about the issue of A La Carte program selection for consumers. On behalf of consumers, this is a real issue when we are offered-- and are forced to subscribe, must pay for--bundles of unwanted programs of which we have no interest, in order to receive the one(s) of interest. We consumers should not have to pay exorbitant amounts on bundled channels we have no interest in-- just to be able to get the desired one or two channels in that bundled package!

My question is whether the FCC has dealt with this important consumer problem and whether you are trying in any way to help us. Please state and explain any regulations you may have made or are considering with respect to A La Carte program selection for consumers. Also, kindly explain the current theory, or propositions of our FCC Commissioners at this time, on this practice.

Thank you!
